

0.1 Bonded Object v1.0

Under Pathfinder rules, a wizard experiences no special penalties if he loses his familiar. But if he loses his bonded object, he has to make fairly difficult Concentration checks to even cast spells at all. That subrule is now scrapped. A wizard who's lost his bonded object can cast normally. He just doesn't get any of the benefits of the absent object.

This benefit extends to other classes that have the bonded object feature, like the Arcane Duelist bard archetype.
